DRY GOODS

German chocolate bars (I buy these for gifts and even used them as favors for my daughter’s wedding); dried cranberries, nuts, blue corn chips, regular and quick oatmeal, sugar, cooking oil, powdered sugar, brown sugar, bran flakes, dill pickles, canned fruit, black beans, and canned tomatoes

REFRIGERATED/FROZEN FOODS

eggs, milk (they sell only gallons), shredded cheese, and frozen fruits and vegetables

PRODUCE

When we do not have vegetables in the garden, I buy bagged spinach, romaine hearts, sweet peppers, jalapeno peppers, zucchini, tomatoes (these do vary from week to week…if they look bad I do not buy them), pineapple, cucumbers, berries, melons, carrots, mushrooms, potatoes, oranges, grapes, and pears.

MORE ABOUT PRODUCE

- The produce quality is sometimes not the best, but most of the time it tastes great and is lots cheaper than similar items at other local stores.
- The fruit is often seasonal. For example, strawberries, blueberries, and melons are usually only available when they are in season (presumably because that is when ALDI can get them cheaply) and grapefruit are available in the winter.
- ALDI does not carry organic produce, which is OK with me.
